

Miguel R. Olivas-Luján, Ph.D., is a professor and former department chair at Pennsylvania Western University in the Business, Economics, and Communication department. His scholarship centers on leadership, workplace dynamics, technology innovation, human resources, evidence-based management, and cross-cultural organizations. His work has been published across peer-reviewed journals, books, and international outlets in multiple languages, reflecting a global perspective on leadership and organizational practice.

Dr. Olivas-Luján has held senior editorial and professional leadership roles for over two decades, including Senior Editor for Emerald's Advanced Series in Management and former Editor-in-Chief of the Business Journal of Hispanic Research. His contributions have been recognized with numerous honors, such as Best Paper, Outstanding Reviewer, Outstanding Service awards from the Academy of Management and its affiliates, as well as several Researcher of the Year distinctions.

An active leader in professional associations, he has served as a division chair within the Academy of Management and contributed to global advisory panels and research centers focused on human resource development. He earned his Ph.D. from the University of Pittsburgh and holds graduate and undergraduate degrees from Monterrey Tech in Mexico.